

MCC-Multi-Channel Commerce

Retailers are increasingly leveraging their presence across channels (catalog, web, stores and kiosks) to increase their share of the customer's wallet and expand their reach across customer segments. Quite a few retail chains today generate a significant portion of their sales on the web. Although the web business was spun off by retailers in the mid 90's as a separate business entity, there is a growing trend towards bringing back the internet business under a single enterprise umbrella to leverage synergies of scale and branding consistency. Recent studies of consumer shopping behavior are proving the fact that multi channel shoppers represent a significantly higher value and frequency of purchase than UNI / BI channel shoppers.

MCC Business Capability Roadmap

A seamlessly integrated enterprise lays the foundation for implementing cross-channel integration. This can be achieved through centralized order fulfillment via consolidation of business services and supply chain synchronization across channels. Implementing multi-channel retailing requires a holistic approach – integrating infrastructure, process and people to provide tangible business benefits like

- Higher returns on merchandise, supply chain and technology investments
- Improved shopping experience (increased – conversion rates, basket size, store visits)
- Synchronized operations (intelligent fulfillment, improved order fill rates, stock out reductions)
- Optimized supply chain (single view of inventory, increased inventory turns, reduced shipping costs)

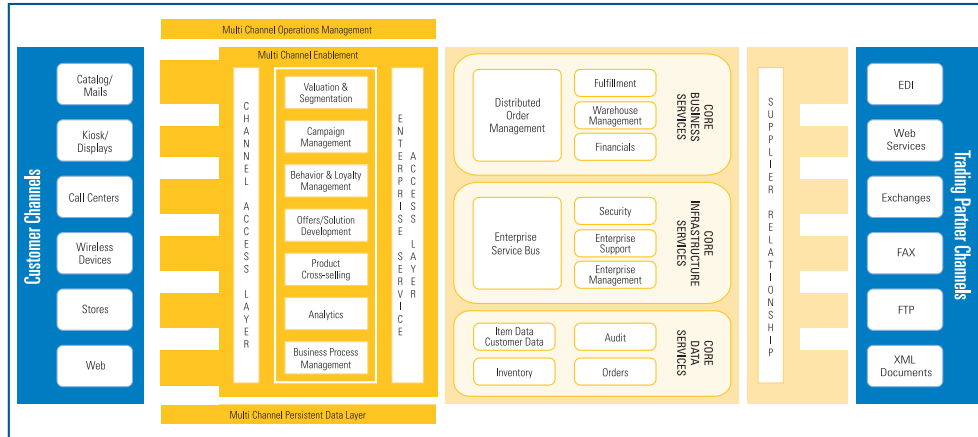

Infosys' MCC expertise in action

- For a leading premium apparel and specialty goods retailer, Infosys has implemented multi-channel retailing solution to leverage inventory across channels to fulfill customer orders seamlessly.
- Infosys has partnered with a large foodservice distributor to deploy a solution that enables deep procurement, customer order management, and scheduling and fulfillment capabilities with an end state objective of presenting a single face to the customer.

Solution Overview

The componentized solution helps retailers acquire effective multi channel retailing capabilities and gain the benefits of leveraging cross channel efficiencies one step at a time, realizing ongoing benefits. Accelerators and frameworks complement a rapid implementation toolkit to drastically reduce the implementation time at a lower cost.
