

Sportsline.com, Inc. Selects Infosys to Enhance its e-Commerce Solutions

December 20, 1999 -- Fremont, CA -- SportsLine.com, Inc., (Nasdaq:SPLN), the leading global Internet sports media company and publisher of CBS SportsLine (<http://cbs.sportsline.com>), has selected Infosys Technologies Ltd. (Nasdaq: INFY), a leading software consulting firm, to expedite the enhancement of reliable, secure and complete eCommerce solutions for SportsLine's family of Web sites worldwide.

"Our alignment with Infosys enables us to more rapidly develop and reliably enhance eCommerce solutions on time and within budget," stated James Bracken, vice president of Engineering and Operations for SportsLine.com, Inc. "Infosys staff, knowledgeable about our eCommerce needs and solutions, will greatly support our development effort going forward," he remarked.

As part of an initial project, Infosys co-developed SportsLine's updated e-Commerce area, Shop SportsLine.com, (<http://shop.sportsline.com>) assisting the company in adding more than 70 features and enhancements to the store over a period of five months; these included the ability to track orders online, mark products with qualifiers as well as changes in the user interface. As part of the SportsLine team for on-going projects, Infosys will share responsibility for e-Commerce design, development and testing.

"This relationship has helped us to hone our processes to meet the requirements of an industry that is changing daily and evolving rapidly," remarked Phaneesh Murthy, Head of Worldwide Sales and Marketing for Infosys. "By deploying our unique combination of e-Commerce expertise and our Global Delivery Model, we can rapidly deliver e-Commerce solutions and provide value for dot-com customers," observed Murthy.

Infosys will provide SportsLine with its Global Delivery Model, a virtual 24 hour workday, as well as additional functionality through its time-boxing model, a methodology for delivering rapid functionality to the business in timeframes that SportsLine specifies.
